THE DAILY BREAD

The Fiat of the Beloved

The Battle

Spiritual Warfare for Women

A FORMATION BOOK BY

Kendall Peterson

The Everyday Apostle

THE DAILY BREAD

Fiat of the Beloved

The Battle

Spiritual Warfare in a Woman's Life

✦ ✦ ✦

A Daily Bread Formation Book

The Everyday Apostle

INTRODUCTION

You Are Already in It

There is a battle, it is real, and a woman is already in it, whether she recognizes it or not. Most Catholic women either do not take the spiritual battle seriously, living as though it were someone else's concern or a relic of a less enlightened age, or they misunderstand where the battle is actually being fought, looking for an enemy outside while the real conflict rages within. And the result, in either case, is a woman losing ground she does not know she is losing, wounded by lies she does not recognize as attacks, fighting the wrong battle or not fighting at all, in a war she cannot opt out of simply by ignoring it.

This book is about that battle and how to fight it. It will show that the spiritual battle is real and that a woman is already engaged in it; that for women the battlefield is predominantly interior, the enemy attacking from within through specific lies rather than from without; that there are three enemies, the world, the flesh, and the devil, each with its own tactics against a woman; and that there are real weapons, given by God and the Church, with which she can fight and win. The spiritual battle is not a metaphor but a reality, and a woman who learns to recognize it and to fight it with the right weapons on the right battlefield can stop losing ground and begin to win.

We do not wrestle against flesh and blood, but against the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly places. — Ephesians 6:12

The Scripture tells a woman plainly that her real struggle is not against flesh and blood but against spiritual forces of evil, a battle in the unseen realm that touches her very directly. This book will equip her for it: recognizing that there is a battle and that she is in it; understanding that the battlefield is interior; identifying the world as a system designed to keep her striving and never arriving; recognizing the flesh and its disordered desires; knowing the devil as a real personal adversary who knows her name and her weakness; taking up the weapons God has given, the armor of God, the sacraments, the Rosary and Marian intercession; and resting in the certainty that, though the battle is real, the victory in Christ is not in doubt. It is time a woman recognized the battle she is in, and learned to fight it well.

CHAPTER ONE

There Is a Battle

And You Cannot Sit It Out

The first thing a woman must grasp is that the spiritual battle is real, that there genuinely is an enemy and a conflict, and that she is already in it whether she acknowledges it or not, so that ignoring the battle does not exempt her from it but only leaves her undefended. Many women live as if the spiritual battle were unreal or irrelevant, and this very assumption is one of the enemy's great advantages, for a woman who does not know she is in a battle does not defend herself, and taking the battle seriously is the first step to fighting it at all.

Be sober-minded; be watchful. Your adversary the devil prowls around like a roaring lion, seeking someone to devour. — 1 Peter 5:8

The Battle Is Real

The spiritual battle is not a metaphor, a relic of a superstitious past, or a concern only for the especially holy, but a real conflict in which every Christian is engaged, a genuine warfare against spiritual forces that seek to separate a woman from God. The Scripture speaks of the spiritual battle not as poetic imagery but as reality, warning that the devil prowls like a roaring lion seeking someone to devour, that the Christian wrestles against spiritual forces of evil, and this reality does not depend on whether a woman believes it or feels it, for the battle is real whether or not she recognizes it. This means a woman must take the spiritual battle seriously as an actual conflict, not dismiss it as unreal or irrelevant, for to deny the battle is not to escape it but to face it undefended, unaware of the real forces at work against her soul. The woman who grasps that the battle is real takes it seriously, no longer dismissing the spiritual conflict but recognizing the actual forces engaged against her. The battle is real, not a metaphor or a relic of superstition but a genuine warfare against spiritual forces that seek to separate a woman from God, a reality that does not depend on whether she believes it, so that to deny the battle is to face it undefended.

You Are Already Engaged

A woman does not choose whether to be in the spiritual battle, for she is already in it by virtue of being a soul that the enemy seeks to draw from God, so that her only choice is whether to fight it knowingly or to be fought against unaware. The spiritual battle is not an optional engagement a woman may enter or decline but a conflict she is already in, for the enemy seeks every soul, and a woman is a target whether she acknowledges it or not, already engaged in a war she did not choose to enter. This means a woman cannot sit out the battle, cannot opt out by ignoring it, for she is already in it, and her only real choice is whether to fight it consciously, defending herself and advancing, or to remain passive, losing ground to an enemy she refuses to recognize. The woman who understands that she is already engaged stops imagining she can avoid the battle and takes up the fight she is already in. You are already engaged in the spiritual battle, a conflict you did not choose but are in by virtue of being a soul the enemy seeks, so that the only real choice is whether to fight it knowingly or to be fought against unaware, for a woman cannot sit it out.

Vigilance Is Required

Because the battle is real and ongoing, a woman must be vigilant, sober-minded and watchful as the Scripture commands, alert to the enemy's activity rather than drifting through her spiritual life unaware of the forces at work against her. The Scripture's command to be sober-minded and watchful is a command to vigilance, to an alertness that recognizes the reality of the battle and stays watchful against the enemy's attacks, for the woman who drifts unaware is the one most easily devoured, while the vigilant woman sees the attacks coming and can defend against them. This vigilance is not anxious fear but sober alertness, a settled awareness that the battle is real and that the enemy is active, which keeps a woman watchful against his tactics, attentive to the lies and temptations he brings, ready to resist rather than caught off guard. The woman who maintains the required vigilance stays sober and watchful, alert to the enemy's activity and ready to resist rather than drifting unaware. Vigilance is required in the real and ongoing battle, a sober-minded watchfulness alert to the enemy's activity rather than a drifting unawareness, for the woman who stays watchful sees the attacks coming while the one who drifts is most easily devoured.

CHAPTER TWO

The Interior Battlefield

The Enemy Attacks From Within

For a woman, the spiritual battle is predominantly interior, fought not mainly on some external field but within her own mind and heart, for the enemy attacks a woman first and most effectively from within, through the specific lies she is most likely to believe. Understanding that the battlefield is interior is crucial, for a woman looking for an external enemy may miss the real attack entirely, which comes as a thought, a feeling, a belief about herself, planted within and mistaken for her own, so that recognizing the interior battlefield is essential to fighting the battle on the ground where it is actually waged.

The weapons of our warfare have divine power to destroy strongholds. We destroy arguments and take every thought captive to obey Christ. — 2 Corinthians 10:4-5

The Battle Is Fought Within

The spiritual battle for a woman is fought chiefly within her, in her thoughts, her beliefs about herself, her inner life, rather than primarily in external circumstances, so that the real battlefield is interior and the real weapons are aimed at strongholds in the mind. The enemy does not usually attack a woman first through dramatic external events but through her interior life, planting thoughts, suggesting beliefs, building strongholds in her mind, so that the Scripture speaks of warfare that destroys arguments and takes every thought captive, a battle fought in the realm of thought and belief, within the woman herself. This means a woman must recognize that her spiritual battle is largely interior, waged in her mind and heart, and that to fight it she must attend to her thoughts and beliefs, where the enemy builds his strongholds, rather than looking only for external foes. The woman who understands that the battle is fought within attends to the interior battlefield, recognizing that the real conflict is in her thoughts and beliefs. The battle is fought within, chiefly in a woman's thoughts and beliefs about herself rather than in external circumstances, so that the real battlefield is interior and the enemy builds his strongholds in the mind, where the weapons of warfare are aimed to destroy arguments and take every thought captive.

Lies Dressed as Your Own Thoughts

The enemy's chief interior weapon is the lie, planted in a woman's mind and dressed as her own thought, so that she mistakes the enemy's suggestion for her own conviction and believes it without suspecting its source. The most effective attacks come not as obvious temptations a woman can recognize and resist but as lies that feel like her own thoughts, suggestions planted so subtly that she takes them for her own convictions, beliefs about herself and about God that she never examines because she does not suspect they came from the enemy. This means a woman is often deceived not by thoughts she recognizes as attacks but by lies she has accepted as her own truth, strongholds of false belief built in her mind, so that fighting the battle requires learning to recognize these lies for what they are rather than accepting them as her own thoughts. The woman who recognizes lies dressed as her own thoughts learns to question the beliefs about herself and God that may be the enemy's planted lies rather than her own truth. Lies dressed as your own thoughts are the enemy's chief interior weapon, planted so subtly that a woman mistakes them for her own convictions and believes them without suspecting their source, so that she is deceived by strongholds of false belief she has accepted as her own truth.

Taking Thoughts Captive

Fighting the interior battle means taking thoughts captive, examining the beliefs and thoughts in one's mind, testing them against the truth, and refusing the ones that are lies, rather than accepting every thought as one's own and true. The Scripture calls the Christian to take every thought captive to obey Christ, to examine the thoughts in one's mind rather than accepting them all, to test them against the truth of God and reject the ones that are false, and this is the central work of the interior battle, learning to question one's thoughts, to recognize the lies among them, and to refuse those lies in favor of the truth. This means a woman does not have to be at the mercy of every thought that enters her mind, for she can take her thoughts captive, examining them, testing them against the truth, rejecting the lies and holding to the truth, fighting the interior battle in the realm of thought where it is actually waged. The woman who takes her thoughts captive examines and tests the thoughts in her mind, refusing the lies and holding to the truth rather than accepting every thought as her own. Taking thoughts captive is the central work of the interior battle, examining the beliefs and thoughts in one's mind, testing them against the truth, and refusing the lies, so that a woman is not at the mercy of every thought but fights the battle in the realm of thought where it is waged.

CHAPTER THREE

The World

The System That Keeps You Striving

The first of the three enemies is the world, not the created world that God made good, but the world as a system of values opposed to the Gospel, and for a woman this system often takes the particular form of a definition of worth and beauty designed to keep her perpetually striving and never arriving. Understanding the world as this enemy, a system of false values that measures a woman's worth by what she produces and how she is perceived, and that keeps her always chasing and never enough, is essential to recognizing one of the chief forces arrayed against her.

Do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewal of your mind. — Romans 12:2

Not the Creation but the System

The world as an enemy is not the good creation God made but a system of values, attitudes, and pressures opposed to the Gospel, a way of seeing and valuing that stands against God's truth and seeks to shape a woman according to its false standards. When the Scripture warns against the world, it does not mean the created order, which is good, but the world as a system, the collective values and pressures of a fallen society that stand opposed to the Gospel, a way of thinking and valuing that forms people according to falsehood rather than truth. This means the world as an enemy is the system of false values that surrounds a woman and presses her to conform, to adopt its standards of worth and success and beauty, to think and value as it does rather than as the Gospel teaches, so that the world is an enemy precisely as a false system seeking to shape her. The woman who understands the world as a system, not the creation, recognizes the enemy as the false values pressing her to conform rather than the good world God made. Not the creation but the system is what the world means as an enemy, a set of values and pressures opposed to the Gospel that seeks to shape a woman according to its false standards, so that the world is an enemy as a system of falsehood pressing her to conform.

The Trap of Never Enough

For a woman, the world's system often takes the particular form of a definition of worth and beauty that keeps her perpetually striving and never arriving, always measuring herself against an impossible standard and always falling short, trapped in a cycle of never being enough. The world presents women with standards of worth and beauty that can never be fully met, defining a woman's value by her appearance, her achievements, her perception in others' eyes, and setting the bar always just beyond reach, so that she is kept perpetually striving, always chasing an ideal she can never attain, always measuring herself and always falling short, trapped in the exhausting cycle of never being enough. This trap is a design of the world's system, keeping a woman endlessly striving and never arriving, her worth always in question, her peace always deferred, so that she spends herself chasing a standard engineered never to be reached. The woman who recognizes the trap of never enough sees the world's definition of worth as a designed snare, keeping her striving and never arriving, and can begin to step out of it. The trap of never enough is the world's particular snare for women, a definition of worth and beauty engineered to keep her perpetually striving and never arriving, always measuring herself against an impossible standard and always falling short, so that her worth is always in question and her peace always deferred.

Refusing the World's Measure

A woman fights the world by refusing its measure of her worth, rejecting its false standards, and anchoring her sense of value not in the world's impossible ideals but in the truth of who she is before God, renewing her mind according to the Gospel rather than conforming to the world. The Scripture commands not conforming to the world but being transformed by the renewal of the mind, and this is how a woman fights the world's enemy, by refusing its measure, rejecting its definition of her worth, and anchoring her value instead in the truth that she is a beloved daughter of God, worthy not because she meets the world's standards but because God made and loves her. This refusing of the world's measure frees a woman from the trap of never enough, for her worth no longer depends on the world's impossible ideals but rests on the unshakable truth of God's love, so that she can step out of the exhausting cycle of striving and rest in who she is before Him. The woman who refuses the world's measure anchors her worth in God's truth rather than the world's standards, freed from the trap of never arriving. Refusing the world's measure is how a woman fights this enemy, rejecting its false standards of worth and anchoring her value in the truth of who she is before God, renewing her mind according to the Gospel so that she is freed from the trap of never enough and rests in God's love rather than the world's impossible ideals.

CHAPTER FOUR

The Flesh

The Desires That War Within

The second enemy is the flesh, not the body itself, which God made good, but the disordered desires within a woman that war against the spirit, the inclinations toward sin that pull her away from God and toward what harms her. Understanding the flesh as this enemy, the disordered desires that oppose the spirit and draw a woman toward sin, is essential to recognizing the battle that is fought within her own appetites and inclinations.

The desires of the flesh are against the Spirit, and the desires of the Spirit are against the flesh, for these are opposed to each other. — Galatians 5:17

Not the Body but Disordered Desire

The flesh as an enemy is not the body, which God created good, but the disordered desires and inclinations toward sin that remain in a woman even after baptism, the appetites that have been turned from their right order and pull her toward what is wrong. When the Scripture speaks of the flesh as an enemy, it does not condemn the body or its natural goods but refers to the disordered desires, the inclinations toward sin, the appetites turned from their proper order, that remain in every person and war against the spirit, pulling toward self, toward sin, toward what harms. This means the flesh as an enemy is within a woman, in her own disordered desires and inclinations, the part of her still drawn toward sin that resists the spirit's desire for God, so that the battle against the flesh is a battle within her own appetites rather than against the body God made good. The woman who understands the flesh as disordered desire, not the body, locates this enemy rightly within her own inclinations toward sin rather than in the good body God gave her. Not the body but disordered desire is what the flesh means as an enemy, the inclinations toward sin that remain in a woman and war against the spirit, so that the battle against the flesh is fought within her own appetites turned from their right order, not against the good body God made.

The War Within

The flesh wars against the spirit within a woman, so that she experiences a genuine conflict in her own desires, the disordered appetites pulling one way and the spirit's desire for God pulling the other, a war waged within her own heart. The Scripture describes the flesh and the spirit as opposed to each other, warring within a person, and this is the experience of every woman seeking God, the felt conflict between her disordered desires, which pull toward sin and self, and the desire of her spirit for God and the good, so that she is a battlefield within herself, torn between the two. This means the struggle a woman feels between what she wants to do and what she knows she should do, between her lower desires and her higher longings, is the war of the flesh against the spirit, a real interior conflict that is part of the spiritual battle, not a sign of failure but the normal experience of one in whom the flesh still wars against the spirit. The woman who recognizes the war within understands her interior conflict between disordered desire and the spirit's longing as part of the spiritual battle, not a personal failure. The war within is the flesh warring against the spirit in a woman, so that she experiences a genuine conflict between her disordered desires and her spirit's longing for God, a real interior struggle that is part of the spiritual battle rather than a sign of failure.

Fighting the Flesh by the Spirit

A woman fights the flesh not by her own willpower alone but by the Spirit, through grace, prayer, the sacraments, and the disciplines that strengthen the spirit over the flesh, so that she wars against her disordered desires with the power of God rather than in her own strength. The flesh cannot be conquered by willpower alone, by white-knuckled resistance, but is overcome by walking in the Spirit, by grace, for the Scripture promises that those who walk by the Spirit will not gratify the desires of the flesh, and so a woman fights the flesh by drawing on the Spirit's power through prayer, the sacraments, and the disciplines that strengthen the spirit and weaken the flesh's hold. This means the battle against the flesh is won not by a woman's unaided effort but by cooperation with grace, by walking in the Spirit who alone can overcome the disordered desires, so that she fights her flesh with the power of God and not merely her own resolve. The woman who fights the flesh by the Spirit draws on grace through prayer and the sacraments rather than relying on willpower alone, overcoming disordered desire by the power of God. Fighting the flesh by the Spirit means warring against disordered desires not by willpower alone but by grace, through prayer, the sacraments, and the disciplines that strengthen the spirit, so that a woman overcomes the flesh by the power of God rather than her own unaided resolve.

CHAPTER FIVE

The Devil

He Knows Your Name and Your Weakness

The third enemy is the devil, a real personal adversary, not a symbol or a primitive superstition but an actual fallen spirit who opposes God and seeks to separate a woman from Him, and who, in his malice, studies her, knowing her name and the specific weakness through which he can most effectively attack. Understanding the devil as a real personal enemy, the father of lies who knows a woman's particular vulnerabilities and aims his specific lies at them, is essential to recognizing the most personal and cunning of the three enemies.

He was a murderer from the beginning. When he lies, he speaks out of his own character, for he is a liar and the father of lies. — John 8:44

A Real Personal Adversary

The devil is not a metaphor for evil in general or a superstitious relic but a real, personal, fallen spirit, an actual being who opposes God and actively seeks to draw souls away from Him, so that a woman has a genuine personal enemy. The Church teaches, on the clear witness of Scripture, that the devil is a real being, a fallen angel who rebelled against God and now works to oppose Him and to ruin souls, not an impersonal force or a mere symbol but a personal adversary with intelligence and malice, actively seeking to separate each person from God. This means a woman faces not merely abstract evil but a personal enemy, a real spiritual being who opposes her, who seeks her harm, who works actively against her soul, so that she must reckon with the devil as an actual adversary and not dismiss him as a figure of speech or a superstition. The woman who recognizes the devil as a real personal adversary takes him seriously as an actual enemy working against her soul, not a symbol to be explained away. A real personal adversary is what the devil is, an actual fallen spirit who opposes God and seeks to separate a woman from Him, not a metaphor or a superstition but a personal enemy with intelligence and malice working against her soul.

The Father of Lies

The devil's chief weapon is deception, for he is the father of lies, and he attacks a woman above all through falsehood, planting lies about herself, about God, about her worth and her future, which she may believe and act upon to her ruin. Jesus called the devil a liar and the father of lies, naming deception as his primary tactic, and against a woman the devil works chiefly through lies, planting falsehoods in her mind, lies that she is not enough or that she is too much, that her worth depends on what she produces or how she is seen, that God could not want someone like her, that her past has disqualified her, lies dressed as her own thoughts and believed as truth. This means the devil's main attack is not usually dramatic but deceptive, the planting of lies that a woman accepts and lives by to her harm, so that recognizing his lies for what they are, and refusing them with the truth, is the heart of resisting him. The woman who knows the devil as the father of lies learns to recognize his falsehoods and refuse them with the truth, seeing through his chief weapon. The father of lies is what the devil is, attacking a woman above all through deception, planting lies about herself, God, her worth, and her future that she may believe to her ruin, so that recognizing and refusing his lies with the truth is the heart of resisting him.

He Knows Your Weakness

The devil studies a woman and knows her particular weakness, the specific lie that will land with the most force in her particular history, aiming his attacks with cunning precision at the vulnerabilities he has learned, so that his assault on her is personal and tailored. The devil is not a blunt instrument but a cunning adversary who studies each person, learning a woman's history, her wounds, her fears, her particular vulnerabilities, so that he can aim at her the specific lie most likely to wound her, tailoring his attack to her weakness, striking where she is least defended, with a precision born of malicious study. This means a woman faces not a generic temptation but a personal and tailored assault, the devil aiming at her particular weakness the particular lie designed for her, so that she must know her own vulnerabilities, where she is most likely to be attacked, in order to guard them, even as she takes comfort that the enemy who knows her weakness is himself already defeated by Christ. The woman who understands that the devil knows her weakness guards her particular vulnerabilities and recognizes the tailored lies aimed at them, no longer caught off guard by attacks designed for her. He knows your weakness, for the devil studies a woman and aims the specific lie that will land with the most force in her particular history, so that his assault is personal and tailored, and a woman must know her own vulnerabilities to guard them against the lies designed for her.

CHAPTER SIX

The Weapons You Have

An Arsenal Already Given

A woman is not sent into the spiritual battle unarmed, for God and the Church have given her a whole arsenal of real weapons, the armor of God, the sacraments, the Rosary and Marian intercession, with which she can resist the enemy and win, so that the battle, though real, is one she is equipped to fight. Understanding the weapons a woman already has, and learning to take them up, turns her from a defenseless target into an armed and equipped combatant, able to resist the enemy and to stand.

Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. — James 4:7

The Armor of God

The Scripture gives a woman the image of the armor of God, a set of spiritual defenses and weapons, truth, righteousness, faith, salvation, the word of God, and prayer, which she is to put on daily as a practical strategy for the battle. The armor of God described in Scripture is not a mere metaphor but a practical daily strategy, a set of spiritual defenses a woman puts on, the belt of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the shield of faith that quenches the enemy's darts, the helmet of salvation, the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God, all wielded in constant prayer, so that she is armed against the enemy's attacks. This means a woman can take up the armor of God deliberately each day, clothing herself in truth and righteousness and faith, taking up the word of God and prayer, as a real and practical preparation for the battle, so that she faces the enemy armed rather than defenseless. The woman who puts on the armor of God arms herself daily with the spiritual defenses and weapons Scripture gives, prepared for the battle rather than exposed. The armor of God is a practical daily strategy, a set of spiritual defenses and weapons, truth, righteousness, faith, salvation, the word of God, and prayer, that a woman puts on deliberately so that she faces the enemy armed rather than defenseless.

The Sacraments and Reconciliation

Among a woman's most powerful weapons are the sacraments, especially the Eucharist and Reconciliation, which give grace to resist the enemy and to recover ground lost to his lies, so that the sacramental life is central to the spiritual battle. The sacraments are not merely devotional practices but real sources of the grace by which a woman fights the enemy, the Eucharist strengthening her with Christ Himself, and Reconciliation in particular serving as the means of recovering ground lost to sin and to the enemy's lies, cleansing her, restoring her, and renewing her strength for the battle. This means a woman fights the spiritual battle powerfully through the sacraments, drawing on their grace to resist the enemy and returning regularly to Reconciliation to recover whatever ground she has lost, so that the sacramental life is one of her chief weapons in the warfare. The woman who wields the sacraments and Reconciliation draws on their grace to resist the enemy and recover lost ground, making the sacramental life central to her fight. The sacraments and Reconciliation are among a woman's most powerful weapons, the Eucharist strengthening her with Christ and Reconciliation recovering ground lost to the enemy's lies, so that the sacramental life is central to the spiritual battle and a chief means of resisting and recovering.

The Rosary and Our Lady

A woman has in the Rosary and in the intercession of Our Lady specific and powerful weapons in the spiritual battle, for Mary is a formidable adversary of the enemy, and her intercession, sought especially through the Rosary, brings real help against him. The Church has long regarded the Rosary as a powerful weapon in spiritual warfare and Our Lady as a mighty intercessor against the enemy, for she who is the mother of Christ and the woman at enmity with the serpent brings powerful aid to those who seek her help, so that a woman fighting the battle can take up the Rosary and call on Mary's intercession as real and specific weapons. This means a woman is not alone or unaided in the battle but has in Our Lady a powerful ally and in the Rosary a real weapon, so that she can turn to Mary's intercession, pray the Rosary against the enemy, and draw on the help of the one the enemy most fears. The woman who takes up the Rosary and Our Lady's intercession wields specific and powerful weapons, calling on a mighty ally against the enemy. The Rosary and Our Lady are specific and powerful weapons in the spiritual battle, for Mary is a formidable adversary of the enemy and her intercession, sought especially through the Rosary, brings real help, so that a woman fights with a mighty ally at her side.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Victory Is Not in Doubt

The Battle Is Real, the Outcome Is Won

However real the spiritual battle, a woman fights it from a position of ultimate security, for the decisive victory has already been won by Christ, and the final outcome of the war is not in doubt, so that she fights not in fear of losing but in the confidence of a victory already secured. Understanding that the victory is not in doubt transforms how a woman fights, freeing her from fear and despair, for she battles a defeated enemy from within a war already won by Christ, and her task is to stand in His victory rather than to secure an uncertain outcome.

They have conquered him by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony.
— Revelation 12:11

Christ Has Already Won

The decisive battle of the spiritual war has already been fought and won by Christ, who through His death and resurrection has conquered sin, death, and the devil, so that a woman fights within a victory already secured, not toward an uncertain outcome. The spiritual battle is real and ongoing, but it is fought in the aftermath of Christ's decisive victory, for by His cross and resurrection He has already conquered the enemy, broken his power, and secured the final outcome, so that the devil, though still active, is a defeated foe whose ultimate defeat is certain. This means a woman does not fight to win an uncertain war but fights within a victory already won by Christ, standing in His triumph, resisting an enemy whose defeat is already accomplished, so that her battle is waged from a position of ultimate security rather than desperate uncertainty. The woman who knows that Christ has already won fights from within His victory, resisting a defeated enemy rather than struggling toward an uncertain outcome. Christ has already won the decisive battle through His death and resurrection, conquering sin, death, and the devil, so that a woman fights within a victory already secured, resisting an enemy whose ultimate defeat is certain rather than battling toward an uncertain outcome.

Sharing in the Victory

A woman shares in Christ's victory by remaining in Him, resisting the enemy in His power, and overcoming by the blood of the Lamb and the word of her testimony, so that His triumph becomes hers as she stands in it. The victory Christ won is not distant from a woman but shared with her, for she overcomes the enemy, as the Scripture says, by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of her testimony, standing in Christ's victory, resisting in His power, holding to her faith and her witness, so that His triumph becomes effective in her own battle. This means a woman does not win the spiritual battle by her own strength but by sharing in Christ's victory, remaining in Him, drawing on His power, overcoming the enemy through the triumph He has already secured, so that her victory is a participation in His. The woman who shares in the victory overcomes the enemy not by her own strength but by standing in Christ's triumph, overcoming by the blood of the Lamb. Sharing in the victory is how a woman overcomes, remaining in Christ and resisting the enemy in His power, conquering by the blood of the Lamb and the word of her testimony, so that Christ's triumph becomes effective in her own battle.

Fighting Without Fear

Because the victory is secure, a woman can fight the spiritual battle without fear or despair, engaging the enemy confidently as a defeated foe, standing firm in Christ's triumph rather than trembling before an uncertain outcome. The certainty of Christ's victory frees a woman from the fear that might otherwise paralyze her in the face of a real and cunning enemy, for she knows the enemy is already defeated and the outcome already secured, so that she can fight confidently, resist firmly, and stand without the fear or despair that would come from facing an uncertain war. This means a woman engages the spiritual battle not anxiously, as though everything depended on her and the outcome were in doubt, but confidently, as one who fights a beaten enemy within a war already won, standing firm in Christ's victory and resisting without fear. The woman who fights without fear engages the enemy confidently as a defeated foe, standing in the certainty of Christ's victory rather than trembling before an uncertain outcome. Fighting without fear is possible because the victory is secure, so that a woman engages the enemy confidently as a defeated foe, standing firm in Christ's triumph and resisting without the fear or despair that would come from facing an uncertain war.

CONCLUSION

Fight, and Stand

The woman who did not recognize the battle, or who looked for the enemy in the wrong place, now knows the war she is in and how to fight it. We have seen that the spiritual battle is real and that she is already in it; that the battlefield is interior, the enemy attacking through lies dressed as her own thoughts; that the world is a system designed to keep her striving and never arriving; that the flesh is the disordered desire that wars within her; that the devil is a real personal adversary who knows her name and her weakness; that she has real weapons, the armor of God, the sacraments, the Rosary and Our Lady; and that, though the battle is real, the victory in Christ is not in doubt.

Through all of it runs a single charge: fight, and stand. Do not ignore the battle or fight it on the wrong ground, but recognize the war you are in, take up the weapons God has given, and stand firm against the enemy in the victory Christ has already won. The battle is real, and you cannot sit it out, but you are not defenseless, and you do not fight toward an uncertain end, for the outcome is already secured by the blood of the Lamb.

So fight, and stand. Take the battle seriously as the real conflict it is. Recognize that it is fought within, and take your thoughts captive, refusing the enemy's lies. Refuse the world's measure of your worth, and anchor it in God's love. War against the flesh by the power of the Spirit. Know the devil as the real and personal adversary he is, and see through his lies. Take up your weapons, the armor of God, the sacraments, regular Reconciliation, the Rosary and the intercession of Our Lady. And through it all, fight without fear, for the enemy you face is already defeated, and the victory you stand in is already won. The enemy knows your name and your weakness. Now you know his, and you know the One who has already conquered him. Fight, and stand, in the victory of Christ.

✦ ✦ ✦

The Battle is part of The Daily Bread Library.

The Everyday Apostle · everydayapostle.com